183. Montpelier Slave Cemetery

Location: US 60 E for 1.1 miles to Brockman Park Drive (838) on the left. After turning left on Brockman Park Drive continue to the second road which is the entrance to Fairmont Crossing. Turn left into the drive and look up the hill to the left. You will see an overgrown area which is marked by metal fence posts, an open area with many depressions and a small rough wooded area. In this area is believed to be a slave graveyard. It is reported the grave yard is located in the corner of a fenced area of the old farm. A fence ran east-west along a row of planted pines (the few remaining pines along this fence row can be observed (east) across Brockman Park Drive near the building). The old fence line took a northern turn (right angle) at a point just before the drive to the rear of Fairmont Crossing, creating a right angle. According to the report, this was a large slave graveyard. Several depressions between the two overgrown areas were found- possibly there is more evidence in the rough areas. Both of the following GPS coordinates encompass areas that indicate likely burial activity.

Ogden, J. E., October 24, 188[?]; hand carved stone, broken at the end of the death year; short & rough.
(See note below)

Kerr, Hallie H[amm]., May 6, 1906 - June, 1908, standing stone; according to David Coffey, Hallie had drowned in a spring

Note: According to Milton Coffey, J.E. Ogden is possibly a slave, who was called "Uncle Joe," who along with his wife, Sassy, a free woman, took care of the Charles Coffey family while Charles served in the Civil War. Upon Charles' return, J.E. Ogden ("Uncle Joe") and his wife were given 50 acres of land to farm and help to build a farmstead for taking care of the Coffey family. Interestingly enough, his grave is on the "Cripple Henry" Coffey land.
